The Indi-pop singer is now back with her new song titled Ferraree. In a conversation with IndiaToday.in, Anamika talks about her musical journey, an upcoming project associated with Michelle Obama, and more. Here are excerpts from the conversation: How did you get inclined towards music? I was always singing as a little child. I did my Indian classical training in school and once I moved to New York for higher studies, I got my Western classical training. I mix both and that is why I have done English songs. I also have international tracks, which I have composed as well as written. Tell us about your new song Ferraree. I wrote the lyrics. There was a little bit of an incident that happened. I saw a girl chasing a boy and it is usually the other way around. It was very cute. She had a fast car and said I know you like fast cars. So, I interacted with her and it hit me that I should make a song. Ferrari is my most favourite car and it is in my bucket list. It's a brand that is larger than life. I feel the same about my vision. You've been in the music industry for more than two decades. Has it been difficult keeping up with the trends and changes? Yes, I started in 1996 with Catwalk. I've had very major hits. I feel we had organic views and interactions. My initial journey was very good. I was very anti-social media. I never wanted to get on it. But now, I'm going to promote my own song. The industry is different now because everyone has to do their own music videos and be independent. I try not to think about how the industry is shaping up and just go with today. The change is certainly huge. Now there are teenagers who are always active on social media, but I think I have done well in the little time I have been there. It's slow, organic and pretty good. What's your approach while recreating songs, as opposed to making your own songs? If I like a folk tune, I make something of my own from it. I have done such music in the past. But when I do a song, I want that song to be mine. Even Ferraree has a folk tune that goes back about 90 years and my grandmother used to sing it. I wanted to change the lyrics and make it for today's audience. We did beautiful music which people will enjoy. I made it an Urban Punjabi song, because we like mixing genres now. Since you've worked in both Punjabi music industry and Bollywood, are there any differences between the two? I don't think there's any difference. I have been accepted everywhere. For me, music is music and I focus on it that rather than the industry. I try to write very simple lyrics that everyone will understand. Be it any language, it just needs to reach people and they need to love it. So, what's next? I have done a song on world peace which will be a part of Michelle Obama's upcoming project based on women empowerment. The song is very classy. Shakira has also joined the project. We are just waiting for the Covid-19 wave to get over in order to put everything in place. I have two new songs coming up as well, a reggae one and another, a Bollywood banger.
